The law defines this in detail. Generally, it means someone has seriously alarmed, annoyed or harassed you, without a valid reason. You can ask for an Antiharassment Protection Order for yourself, your minor child, a vulnerable adult or other adult you are responsible for. Stalking Protection Order This protects you from being stalked. The law defines this in detail. Generally, it means someone has scared you by harassing or following you on purpose again and again. Stalking can be in-person or online. A stalker could be an intimate partner, family member, someone you live with or another person. You can ask for a Stalking Protection Order for yourself, your minor child, a vulnerable adult or other adult you are responsible for. Domestic Violence Protection Order This protects you from violent intimate partners, family members, or someone you live with. The law defines this in detail. Generally, it means someone has hurt you physically or threatened to hurt you. It also can mean they have behaved sexually in a way that harms you—even once! This type of protection order also can protect you from "coercive control." Coercive control is behavior that causes you to suffer physical, emotional or psychological harm. You can ask for a Domestic Violence Protection Order for yourself, your minor child, a vulnerable adult or other adult you are responsible for.

7. Enter the Respondent Information.
This is the person you are seeking protection from.

All fields marked with an asterisk (*) are required to proceed.

Note: it is very important to enter as much information as possible. If a protection order is granted, this information will be used by the Law Enforcement Agencies to locate and/or identify the respondent. Without sufficient information, the law enforcement agencies will not be able to enter a protection order into the statewide system or serve the documents, which means the protection order may be delayed or unenforceable. This might result in additional hearing dates.
