Most cities that contract with King County for animal-related services adopt by reference King County's animal care and control code (Title 11) "as presently constituted or hereinafter amended," after making any locally-desired tweaks to the controlling standard.<sup>1</sup> Because those city codes automatically update as Title 11 evolves, there is no need for those city councils to <sup>1</sup> For example, under Title 11, "at large" means a dog off its premises and not under control, with "under control" including either by leash or voice or signal control in keeping the dog from approaching a bystander. Several cities that adopt Title 11 clarify that a dog off its premises in that city must be leashed or in a vehicle.

expend effort each time Title 11 changes. Nor is there confusion and administrative red tape in those cities when Title 11 updates. Today's dispute, unfortunately, does not arise in such a city.

Instead, a few cities still maintain their own, stand-alone, comprehensive animal code, containing no mechanism to automatically update that city's standards to incorporate Title 11 improvements. Those cities are mandated by their interlocal agreement with the County to synch their codes, but this requires additional city council action every time Title 11 updates. Tukwilla used to be on that short list, but recently changed to adopt Title 11 by reference; we understand that Shoreline plans to soon follow suit. But as of today, Bellevue, Shoreline, and Woodinville still have their own codes that do not move in tandem with Title 11.

On July 15, 2023, a comprehensive overhaul to Title 11 became effective. The biggest change was shifting from a single-tooled "vicious" animal designation to a two-pronged, "potentially dangerous" and "dangerous animal" system. However, because Woodinville has not updated its codes, there is no "potentially dangerous" or "dangerous animal" designation in Woodinville.

Animal Services' V23014683 involves an allegation that the Baers' dog, Stanley, bit a minor on September 9 within Woodinville city limits and qualifies as a potentially dangerous animal. The problem is that such a designation did not exist on September 9 (and still does not exist) in Woodinville.

Thus, we DISMISS WITHOUT PREJUDICE alleged violation V23014683. If Animal Services believes that Stanley qualifies as vicious, it will need to re-write the violation notices, citing the controlling Woodinville code sections, not Title 11, and re-serve that on Mr. Baer. Mr. Baer will then have to refile his appeal statement. And then we will schedule a hearing on the merits. It will take more time and effort to get to a just outcome.

As Woodinville is forced again to amend its Title 6, we would greatly appreciate if it gave serious consideration to adopting by reference the County's Title 11, as it exists now or is later amended, along with whatever substantive differences are best suited for the city.<sup>2</sup> That would be more efficient for Animal Services (who can write a common violation form, without confusion over the controlling legal standard), for animal owners (who, like Mr. Baer, may need to file duplicative appeals), for complainants (who, given the delays created by scenarios like today, have to wait for resolution), and for the cities themselves (who have to devote valuable legislative resources each time Title 11 updates). But ultimately Woodinville gets to decide how it wishes to amend its code; we will faithfully apply whatever code it comes up with.

<sup>2</sup> For example, under Title 11 only a dog can be "at large," while Bellevue expands this to a "dog or other domesticated animal running at large within the city." Compare BCC 8.04.300.B with KCC 11.04.230.O. Such nuances present no undue burden to a smoothly functioning animal control system.
